

Bed Rooms of Unusual Charm

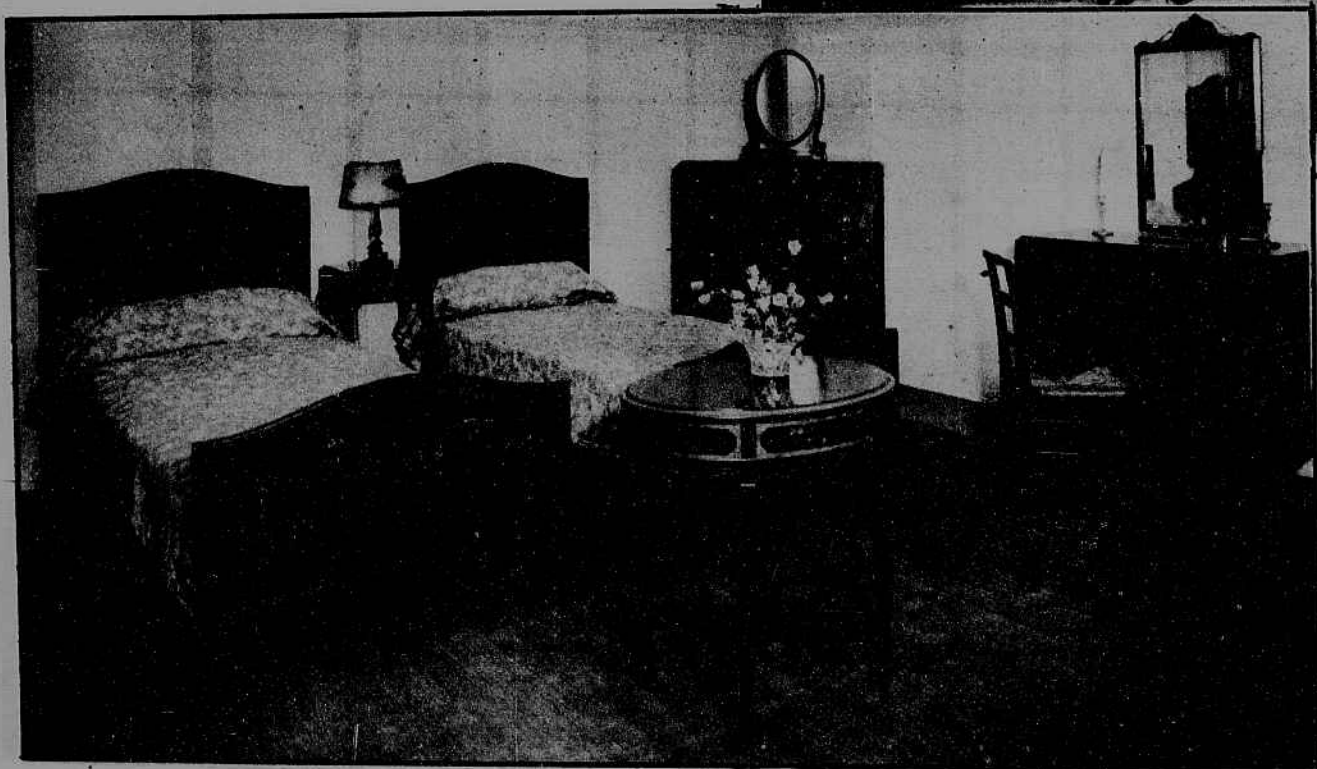

O those of discriminating taste who enjoy planning and replenishing the interiors of their homes to reflect their own personalities the Hampton Shops offer the largest collection of hand-made furniture in America. Here are reproductions of the better known designs of XVIII Century France and England, and also many delightful developments of the unusual phases of decoration which cannot be procured elsewhere in America. Our ever-changing exhibits of interiors offer to our clients resources for visualizing and developing their own preferences in design, color treatment and harmonious accessories, and also the choice of pieces from harmonious sets, for each piece of Hampton furniture is plainly priced and sold separately, thus making possible the choice of just the right piece for each architectural setting and an opportunity to introduce the interesting contrasting notes which give to each room the enduring charm of individuality.

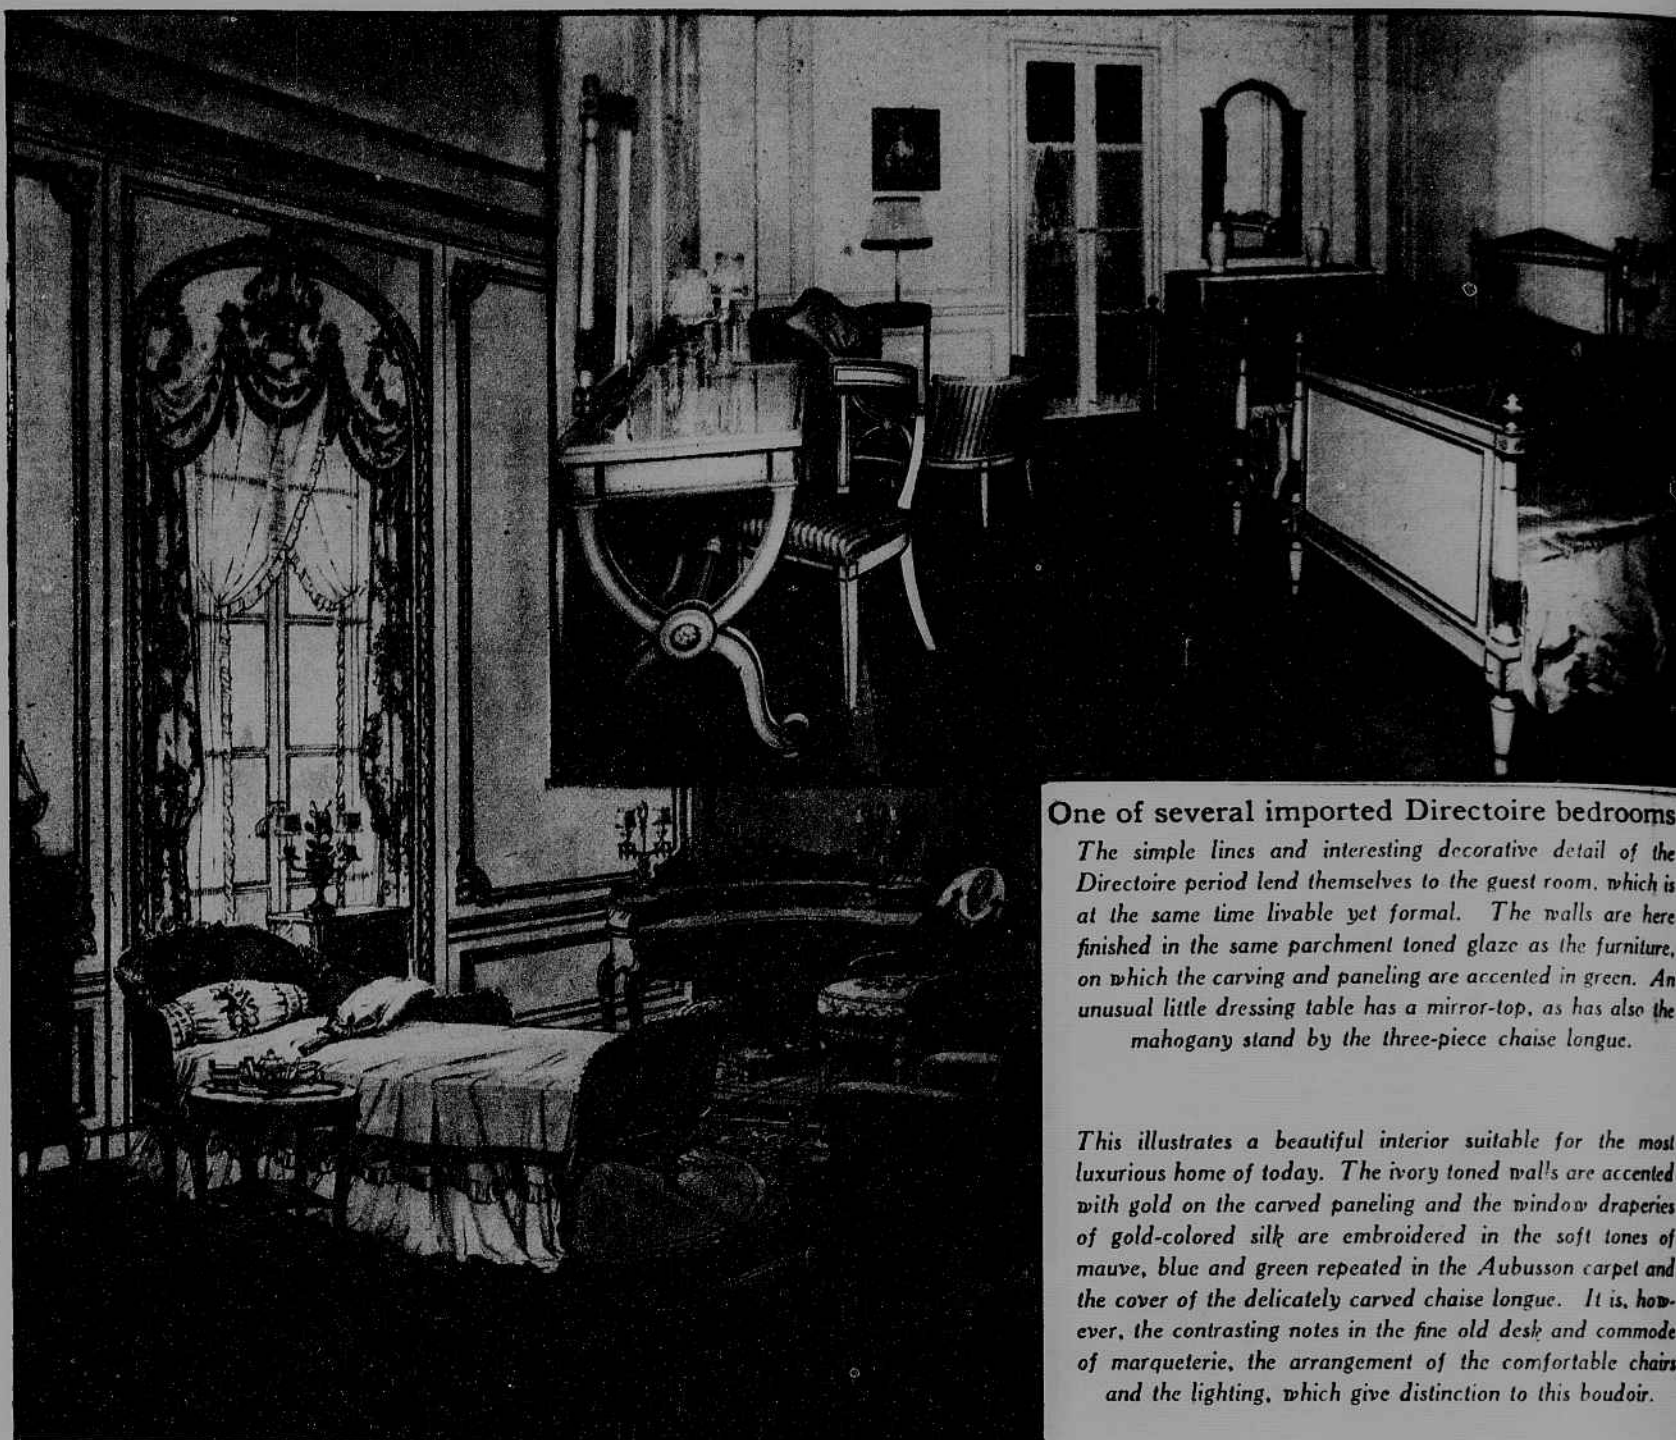

It is so often the unusual incidentals which make a room interesting or livable, and this is especially true of bedrooms. This little French poudreuse of satinwood, with its sliding shelf, disappearing mirror and gallery shelf, is but one of many delightful little pieces recently imported. The dainty slipper chair is a Hampton production covered in taffeta.

Useful and unusual incidental pieces

The country house bedroom seems to demand furniture that is simple, yet it is here as carefully designed and well constructed for its purpose as the more expensive types. These pieces, adapted from designs by Sheraton, are finished to suit varying needs—in black with subdued parchment toned borders and gay floral garlands for the sunny room—in golden parchment glaze with narrow black outlines and lovely flower medallions for the north room, and in cool gray-green, with the daintiest of little rose decorated borders and clusters. There are similar designs in mahogany with beautiful inlays. There are day-beds with and without backs, chiffarobes, dressing tables, writing tables, stools and double beds, finished to harmonize with the pieces illustrated.

Distinctively simple painted furniture delightfully decorated for the country house.

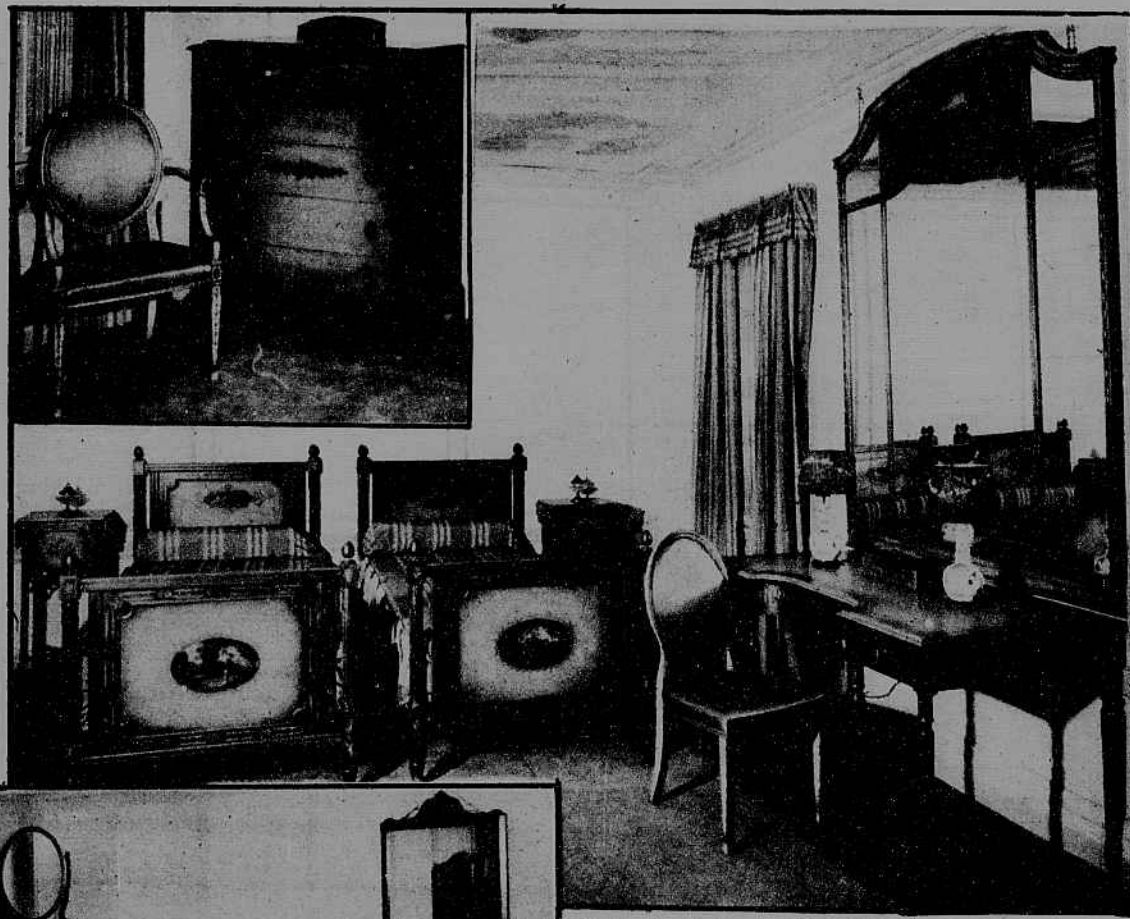

An exquisite boudoir designed by the Hampton Decorators

One of several imported Directoire bedrooms

The simple lines and interesting decorative detail of the Directoire period lend themselves to the guest room, which is at the same time livable yet formal. The walls are here finished in the same parchment toned glaze as the furniture, on which the carving and paneling are accented in green. An unusual little dressing table has a mirror-top, as has also the mahogany stand by the three-piece chaise longue.

This illustrates a beautiful interior suitable for the most luxurious home of today. The ivory toned walls are accented with gold on the carved paneling and the window draperies of gold-colored silk are embroidered in the soft tones of mauve, blue and green repeated in the Aubusson carpet and the cover of the delicately carved chaise longue. It is, however, the contrasting notes in the fine old desk and commode of marqueterie, the arrangement of the comfortable chairs and the lighting, which give distinction to this boudoir.

Adapted from XVIII Century designs

The classic feeling of the XVIII Century is retained in this furniture, which is finished in green glaze with panels in parchment tones, decorated after the style of Angelica Kauffman, with charming pastorals and dainty floral borders. It is in such uncommon and interesting phases of decoration that you will find the Hampton Exhibits distinctive.

Whether your need is only for a single piece—perhaps a luxurious chair, an unusual personal desk, a gift of lasting charm or the complete furnishings of several rooms—you will find here timely suggestions, while the assistance of our experienced decorators is at your command whenever you may visit our exhibit. To the many who prefer to leave the planning and carrying out of the interiors of their homes in competent hands the services of our staff of skilled designers and decorators are available, for, trained by long years of study, travel and experience, they are equipped to develop interior schemes in accordance with any architectural setting.
